Federal Court Approves NLRB's Employee Rights Poster

On March 2, 2012, U.S. District Judge Amy Berman Jackson of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, ruled, in a forty-six page opinion, that the National Labor Relations Board's controversial "Employee Rights Under the National Labor Relations Act" poster is legal. Judge Jackson, whom President Obama appointed in 2011, found that in enacting the National Labor Relations Act, Congress did not preclude the NLRB "from promulgating a rule that requires employers to post a notice informing employees of their rights under the Act."
