Construction Litigation

Butzel's Construction Law practice is comprehensive. Our experienced lawyers counsel and represent contractors, construction managers, equipment and material suppliers, and hospitals, educational institutions, and public and private owners on projects throughout the United States.

Clients can depend on our attorneys—veterans of the profession that possess experience in all phases of the construction process—including development of initial project concepts, land acquisition and permitting, financing, contract negotiation, preparation of bid and contract documents, bid protests, project administration, claims preparation, negotiation, and mediation and/or litigation.

The firm's Construction Law professionals have collectively practiced for decades in this sector and understand the nuisances that come with each case. Our attorneys clearly draft, review, and negotiate contract agreements to remain proactive when it comes to attempting to avoid conflicts and to prevent misunderstandings down the line. When litigation becomes necessary, Butzel's attorneys have the knowledge, skills, tenacity, and years of experience in litigating complex construction disputes to effectively advise and represent each client. We understand the complexities involved in construction matters and diligently work to ensure the most advantageous resolution for the benefit of each individual client.
