Butzel Long attorney Catherine Karol interviewed on the Marketplace podcast regarding recent White House trade policy changes with Canada and Mexico

6.5.2018

The White House's energy and trade policies are straight out of the '80s

A year-plus into NAFTA negotiations, President Donald Trump might be considering a new tactic: Split up the whole thing into two bilateral deals with Mexico and Canada. We'll take a look at what that would look like. Then, we hear from more businesses feeling the effects of the brewing trade war and looking for exemptions. Plus, 10 years and an internet economy explosion later, the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission are taking stock of real estate data and broker commissions.
