Butzel Long hosts Breakfast Briefing program on Right-to-Work on January 10, 2013 in Bloomfield Hills

12.26.2012

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. – Michigan's recently enacted "right-to-work" laws will make it unlawful to require an employee to become a union member or to pay dues or fees as a condition of employment. However, what does this mean for employers moving forward?

Butzel Long is hosting a breakfast briefing program titled, "Michigan's Right-to-Work Law: A New Frontier?" from 7:45 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, January 10, 2013 at its office in Bloomfield Hills at Stoneridge West Building, 41000 Woodward Avenue. The registration fee is $25 and includes continental breakfast.

This briefing will review these new laws and how they may impact unions, non-union employers, and collective bargaining strategies. Discussion also will include potential union requests to extend current contracts before the law becomes effective, administration of dues check-offs, and potential legal challenges.

"While the concept of 'Right-to-Work' may sound quite simple, the legal obligations of employers (particularly unionized employers) under the new Michigan statutes, may in fact be quite complex," said Craig S. Schwartz, labor and employment law attorney, Butzel Long. "A familiarity with the legal parameters of the RTW statutes is critical to avoid significant legal claims by both employees and labor unions."

Featured presenters include attorneys from Butzel Long's Labor and Employment Law Practice Group. Panelists include Robert A. Boonin and Craig S. Schwartz. The moderator will be Gary W. Klotz.
