Climate change, and more particularly sea level rise, has become an urgent issue along American coastlines, along with the effects of extreme weather. The third annual 2019 Sea Level Rise & Climate Change Conference, hosted by the national law firm of Hinshaw & Culbertson LLP, will take place on Thursday, April 4, 2019 at the Hotel Intercontinental in downtown Miami from 8:30 a.m. – 4:30 p.m. (with cocktails following).

The 2019 Conference will offer a business-oriented program that will explore the Why, What, and When of successful solutions associated with sea level rise in Florida. The program will feature a full day of relevant and substantive panels and speakers featuring leaders from the real estate, finance, and insurance industries plus government and university academicians. FIU's Sea Level Solutions Center will again be active participants.

Picking up where the 2018 program discussion left off—the 2019 conference will take a deeper dive into some of the issues including the current status of sea level rise, the economic, legal, and regulatory implications and how Florida is preparing for this imminent threat. The conference will also explore how members of the business community can collaborate and partner with local and state municipalities and regulatory bodies to develop proactive solutions.
