Anna Dorros is a partner in the Real Estate, Land Use and Environmental Practice Group in the firm's San Diego (Del Mar) office.

Areas of Practice

Anna represents residential, commercial, retail and mixed-use developers in connection with governance, sales and regulatory compliance and approvals associated with the subdivision and sale of real property. She represents publicly held developers, urban high-rise and mixed-use developers, and developers of master planned communities in developing and processing projects and implementing programs to minimize liability. Anna works with master developers of major communities and urban town centers, as well as developers of branded projects, advising on the planning, development and long-term governance of their communities and the sale of parcels for merchant builders.

Anna works extensively with the California Department of Real Estate to obtain approvals on residential projects ranging from standard single family developments to attached and detached condominiums to complex branded mixed-use developments. She partners with her clients to creatively subdivide and govern projects to achieve their goals while maximizing flexibility and ensuring proper allocations of responsibilities and control.
