Christine Swanick is a partner in the Finance and Bankruptcy practice group in the firm's New York office.

Areas of Practice

Christine Swanick has practiced federal Indian law for 23 years. Christine advises clients in all aspects of federal Indian law and tribal law matters and represents tribes and entities doing business with tribes in complex contractual, gaming, regulatory and economic development matters. Christine began her Indian law career working as an in-house tribal attorney for three different federally recognized Indian tribes where she developed gaming ordinances and regulations necessary for start-up tribal gaming operations, advised tribal governments on Indian land status and matters, formed tribal instrumentalities and agencies, drafted employee handbooks and provided a broad range of legal advice and services to her tribal clients. In more recent years, Christine has negotiated on behalf of tribes and gaming developers gaming consulting and management agreements, advised on tribal energy matters and specialized in financing projects on tribal lands. Christine is a nationally recognized expert in tribal lending and restructuring transactions of all kinds and has worked on over 100 Native American and gaming credit transactions involving over 50 different Native American tribes.
