Over the past seven years, the U.S. legal cannabis market has expanded dramatically. There remains, however, significant unmet demand for insurance across a number of classes at every stage of the cannabis production and distribution process. There also remain significant issues related to the ongoing split between federal and state regulations of cannabis creating reticence among many insurers to get involved in the cannabis industry. However many in the insurance industry – brokers, risk managers, and underwriters alike, are developing creative solutions to enable growth. Join Sheppard Mullin and Lockton for an in depth discussion about the present and future of insurance in the cannabis industry.
