Its flagship project, 1871, is the no. 1 ranked university-affiliated business incubator in the world, and the home of roughly 500 high-growth technology startups and about 1,500 members supported by an entire ecosystem focused on accelerating their growth and creating jobs in the Chicagoland area.

Excerpt from the announcement:

"I'm honored to serve as Chairman," said Larry Eppley, Incoming CEC Board Chairman. "Having been part of this organization since its pre-1871 days and watching startup after startup grow and flourish under 1871's support and guidance, I am excited for this next chapter. I look forward to leading the Board and working closely with senior leadership to continue our mission of supporting entrepreneurs on their path to building high-growth, sustainable businesses, creating jobs, and fostering Chicago's tech ecosystem.
