David leverages his experience in high-stakes disputes and strategic problem-solving to navigate clients through intricate legal landscapes.

David thrives in complex litigation and class action cases, with experience across a range of legal areas including appellate, copyright, corporate governance, administrative, employment and complex commercial disputes. He has assisted clients at both the trial and appellate levels, and his work spans drafting dispositive motions, preparing witnesses and managing discovery in federal and state courts.

David previously practiced in California, where he represented a diverse array of clients in complex litigation. He represented a major investment advisor in confidential arbitration, securing a complete victory for his client. David also helped defend a major semiconductor manufacturer in a high-stakes IP dispute, leading to the dismissal of key claims against his client. He has also represented multiple institutions of higher education in administrative proceedings resulting in favorable judicial orders and settlements.

In addition, David maintains a robust pro bono practice focused on public education and constitutional law. In 2020, he represented a major civil rights organization and a coalition of public-school districts, parents and children in successfully challenging a Department of Education rule that sought to
