For nearly a decade, Matt has represented businesses and individuals in complex financial, commercial and construction disputes.

Matt is an experienced commercial litigator whose practice focuses on business torts, financial services, and construction disputes. Matt's clients value his judgment and attention to detail.

During his career, Matt has worked with executives and employers on non-compete matters; represented clients in breach of contract, tortious interference, and breach of fiduciary duty matters; defended businesses against Missouri Merchandising Practices Act (MMPA) claims and class actions; and represented businesses and government entities in actions involving concentrated animal feeding operations (also known as CAFOs). Matt has a national practice and, together with co-counsel, has litigated in courts and arbitrations across the country. He regularly consults with members of Stinson's real estate, environmental and corporate finance teams.

Prior to joining Stinson, Matt worked as corporate counsel at a national engineering firm headquartered in Kansas City.
