Office: Dallas

Steve understands what influences government decision-making and how to shape policy, regulatory and political outcomes.

Steve's practice sits at the intersection of policy, government and politics. He is a trusted advisor to individuals, businesses, public entities and private organizations across the country for regulatory, procurement and legislative matters.

Steve represents companies and organizations engaged in the political process, including businesses, nonprofits and individuals involved in state and federal political activities and initiatives. He skillfully navigates the intricate landscape of committees and agencies to identify opportunities, overcome obstacles and directly address challenges for clients seeking government approvals, program participation, representation in investigations or access to funding.

Steve also advises companies in the hospitality, energy, technology and transportation industries on various state and federal regulatory and policy matters. Additionally, his practice extends to state and federal contracting and grant opportunities. He also collaborates with the attorneys in the firm's DC office who develop comprehensive solutions for clients concerning policy and legislative priorities.
