Stinson LLP Partner Dwight Larson is featured in a Law360 article, "Former Mortensen GC Returns To Stinson in Minneapolis."

The feature provides insight into the focus of Larson's practice and highlights his decision to return to Stinson after spending 25 years in-house.

"The firm has maintained the things I really liked about it such as the excellence in practicing law and its tradition of great client service," Larson said. "It's also a place that really treats people both internally and externally with respect. It's really a terrific working environment."

Larson also details how his in-house experience will aide in his ability to solve the business needs of the firm's clients.

"My experience with Honeywell and Mortenson gives me a good perspective on how clients view their issues," he said. "The importance of really understanding the client perspective on things really has an impact on the company and helps us ensure that the work we provide is addressing the business needs of our clients."

Larson focuses his practice on complex construction and energy transactions. He frequently works with construction contractors on matters involving energy projects, large and highly-visible sports venues and large commercial projects, along with a broad range of public projects. He also handles work relating to government contracts for clients in the construction and energy industries.
