Stinson LLP Partners Stephen Quinlivan and Kelly Stout authored an article for the New York Law Journal, "Delaware Court Invalidates Portions of Stockholder Agreement."

The article explores the altered landscape for public company mergers and acquisitions (M&A), joint ventures and investor relations, in light of a recent Delaware Court of Chancery decision that found certain stockholder agreement provisions to be unlawful. The court ruled portions of a company's stockholder agreement violated Section 141(a) of Delaware law, which governs corporate management powers.

The attorneys say although the decision only applies to entities in Delaware, its reach will be significant and can be interpreted, under the most restrictive interpretation, to upend long standing market practices.

"While practitioners should be mindful of the fiduciary duty implications of violating Section 141(a), the stockholder agreement in this particular instance placed extreme limitations on the ability of the board to make decisions on behalf of the company, much more than those found in a typical stockholder agreement," the attorneys write. "Despite these extreme limitations, the court noted that similar provisions that acquirers may wish to include in stockholder agreements between the acquirer and a target company could be restructured as preferred stock rights set forth in a certificate of designations or included as other provisions of a certificate of incorporation."

The attorneys say M&A practitioners and the market in general will continue to develop alternatives permissible under Delaware law. "As such, the case does not appear to be a road block to many common M&A activities."
