Joe Miller, a partner in the Vorys Columbus office and chair of the firm's litigation group, was quoted in a Columbus Dispatch story titled "Upper Arlington Council OKs National Church Residences' new campus plan over objections."

The story states:

"National Church representative Joe Miller maintained that after several community engagement sessions, the developer has worked to be a 'good neighbor' to its surrounding residents. He said that given the scope of this project, he thought it was "extraordinary" to only be seeking one variance.

'We believe that this project 100% furthers the goals of the district by proposing a planned, walkable, mixed-use environment with a focus on the office and office-related uses,' Miller said.

Miller also said that if the council denied the proposal, it could cause the developer to relocate, thereby having a detrimental effect on the city by causing a loss of "much-needed" housing for seniors and millions of tax dollars."
