In these unprecedented times brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic, many employees and employers are being forced to navigate the uncertainty of reality each and every day. While no one can predict how long the impacts of COVID may last, it is clear that it has changed the way businesses are conducting their affairs and many employees will continue to work remotely for the long term. Anthony P. Salvino and Karalynne Parzych discuss the multiple considerations for employees and employers and the workers' compensation ramifications of employees working from home in The Legal Intelligencer, "Work From Home: Workers' Compensation Considerations."
