Mark believes that proactive and thorough investigation is critical to assess a claim and posture its defense. This approach maximizes the ability to analyze risk and chart a course for resolution, whether by mediation, arbitration or trial.

OVERVIEW

Mark Paladino defends large personal injury actions in various areas of tort liability, including motor vehicle liability, premises liability and professional liability. His practice also includes a variety of complex matters, including life, health and disability insurance, coverage claims, bad faith and extracontractual damages claims. He has a background in appellate practice and has extensive experience in briefing many multifaceted and developing legal issues.

Mark believes that proactive and thorough investigation is critical to assess a claim and posture its defense. He is frequently called out to active accident scenes for emergency investigations, during which he regularly interfaces with governmental investigatory agencies and works to identify and preserve crucial evidence. This approach maximizes the ability to analyze risk and chart a course for resolution, whether by mediation, arbitration, or trial. It also allows for early and aggressive pursuit on any viable indemnity or contribution claims, a key component that Mark is experienced in addressing.

Prior to joining White and Williams, Mark served as a judicial intern in the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas for the Honorable Matthew D. Carrafiello. In law school, Mark was a Beasley Scholar and recipient of the Jack M. Golden and Frieda Golden Prize for superior legal writing in the area of healthcare and health administration. He was also a member of the Temple Political and Civil Rights Law Review and Secretary of the Sports and Entertainment Law Society.
