

White and Williams Elects Four Lawyers to Partnership, Promotes Six Associates to Counsel

1.6.17

White and Williams is pleased to announce the election of Edward Beitz, Justin Fortescue, Jennifer Santangelo and Amy Vulpio to the partnership and the promotion of Paul Briganti, Joshua Galante, Dana Spring Monzo, George Morrison, Craig O'Neill and Steven Urgo from associate to counsel.

The newly elected partners and promoted counsel represent the wide array of practices that White and Williams offers its clients, including bankruptcy, corporate, finance, healthcare, insurance coverage, labor and employment, real estate and reinsurance. These lawyers have earned their elevations based on their contributions to the firm and their practices.

"We are thrilled to elect these four lawyers to the partnership and promote six associates to counsel. These promotions are representative of the breadth of services and deep bench that we have to offer at White and Williams," said Patti Santelle, Managing Partner. "The election of our new partners and promotion of our counsel is a reflection of their success and dedication as well as the continued health of the firm."

Edward Beitz is a member of the Healthcare Group, resident in the Philadelphia office. He focuses his practice on medical malpractice defense, defending doctors, nurses, physician assistants and hospitals at the trial and appellate court levels, as well as general liability matters. Ed also handles excess insurance coverage matters.

Justin Fortescue focuses his practice on reinsurance and commercial litigation matters, practicing out of the Philadelphia office. He counsels insurers and reinsurers on a wide array of issues, including the applicability of the follow-the-settlements doctrine, the accumulation of products and non-products losses and offset rights in the context of an insurer's insolvency. Justin also has extensive experience in matters involving the Federal Arbitration Act, including actions seeking confirmation and vacatur of arbitration awards.

Jennifer Santangelo is a member of the Finance and Real Estate Groups, resident in the Philadelphia office. She counsels clients in all aspects of a transaction, including structuring, documenting and closing transactions and, when necessary, the restructure and workout of non-performing transactions. Jennifer's practice also includes the acquisition, construction and receivables financing for timeshare projects throughout the country.
